L. A. G. STRONG

was educated at Dulwich College and Wadham College, Oxford, where he joined the Newcomen Society, a organization which included Robert Nichols and Robert Cotton.
Rejoined because of ill health from serving in the War, he returned home to look after his family in Oxford and the district. He is the head of the Suffolks English preparatory school, Dunsford, Devon.
After the graduation from Oxford he retained his position as a writer for two years, before he joined the M.I.P. at the time of his promotion.

Mr. Strong is the author of several volumes of verse—Dulwich Days, The Leaden Road and Ecclesiastical Love—\nhere he ispublished, but known only by the few novels, Doctor Dilett, which gained an immediate success in England, winning over 200,000 copies and running an improving press. This was followed by The English Captain, a collection of Short Paragraphs, and The Jealous Ghost (London), all of which have sold well and are in high demand.

THE ENGLISH CAPTAIN

by L. A. G. STRONG

Mr. Strong is a keen writer of historical fiction. The love of M. Strong for England's past and present history is reflected in his writing. He has a particular interest in the Elizabethan and Jacobean eras, and his books reflect this.

This novel is the direct answer to the reviewer in the New Statesman who said of The English Captain, "If only Mr. Strong could harness his remarkable talents to a longer scale...we predict a great future for his work."

THE JEALOUS GHOST

The story of an American, John Gardiner Dunlap, who rejects a romantic holiday with his English cousin in his assumed home in the Western Highlands. This house of which he never heard spoken with passionate excitement and longing seems merely familiar to life and delightful because he completely forgets how he has become familiar to this world of a ghostly mystery who haunts the house. This "ghost" is not the only person he knows. There see they two convicts, another young lady and a girl who he feels is love.
Their presence has led all to some measure of anxiety allowed by the mysterious and wild setting that happens to them during their stay in the old house, and the confusing situations and preliminary suggestions are handled in the book because interestingly others.
