Bishops Wilkins Principles of Natural Religion, concerning y^e Existence of a Deity

Amoungst all mankind there is no Nation, so wild & barbarous, who though they may mistake in their due apprehensions of y^e nature of Gods yet do not deny his being, there is no Nation so immensely barbarous & savage, as not to believe the Existence of a Deity & by sum kind of Services to express their adoration of him, so Seneca, There is no where any Nation so utterly lost to all things of Law and Morality, as not to believe y^e Existence of God

From the admirable contrivance of Natural things

As the Tally, the great elegance & order of things in y^e world, is abundantly enough to vince y^e necessity of such an Eternal & excellent being, to whom we owe adoration, what can be more obvious than to infer a Supreme Deity from that order & government we may behold amoungst y^e Heavenly Bodies

{ Bacon Esays

God never yet wrought a Miracle to convince an atheist, because to a man that is capable of being convinced his ordinary works are sufficient.
