A few of the names used in Britain for those narrow passageways between buildings, the short-cuts from street to street, the alleys which criss-cross between houses in a row. These paths are for those on foot. Most of these names are specific to an area or place, as is barton in Somerset, droke in Hertfordshire, feus in Fife, ghaut in Whitby, and loke in Aylsham, Norfolk. Opes and drongs are found in Dorset, rackets in Beverley, and shuts in Shrewsbury. York has its snickleways, Lowestoft its scores, and Stow-on-The-Wold, the tures. Backcracks, jiggers and jowlers are found in Liverpool. Some of the words are more general, covering wider areas of useage, like jitty, gennel, ginnel, gunnel and jennel. Lonnen is used in the North East and snicket in Yorkshire. Twitting is used in Brighton, with twitten in Kent and Sussex and twitchel in Derbyshire and Nottingham. Vennel is common in the east of Scotland, while ten foot is used only in Hull.
